Discussion Questions:

1. Thomas (the doubting disciple of Jesus) asked Jesus a common human question. What are the common questions YOU ask Jesus? Why do you ask those common (maybe even daily) questions?
2. We live in a post-modern culture. This means that belief in absolute truth is at an all-time low. If you reject the idea of absolute truth, what does that mean for 1) human sexuality, 2) Gender, 3) Marriage, 4) Child-rearing, 5) Race and 6) Religion?
3. If it is possible to find absolute truth, where (or who) do you go? Why?
4. In certain evangelical circles, Joel Osteen and his popular book, Your Best Life Now, is criticized or labeled as prosperity gospel jargon. But thinking deeply about Jesus' statement, I AM the life, how does this relate (or not relate) to his title, Your Best Life Now.
5. Obviously, knowing and pursuing Jesus is central to the Christian experience. But if that is true, is it even appropriate to spend time reading secular literature (that isn't about Jesus) or enjoying secular art, entertainment or other non-religious hobbies?
